Experience

Harry has a wide range of experience in environmental analysis and landscape design.

Recent projects have included the London Regional Landscape Framework for Natural England, a cross-borough landscape character assessment that developed new tools to assess the sensitivity of landscape types with implications for future spatial planning and management at a regional level. Integrating diverse tempo-spatial data, this methodology is currently being assessed with a view to its application throughout England.

As a landscape designer, Harry has written widely about community engagement and applying landscape ecology principles to design, and applied this in diverse projects, from large scale commercial developments to mixed-use urban regeneration and domestic gardens. Having worked on a wide range of competitions and projects, Harry is experienced at working with Local Planning Authorities and public, commercial and domestic clients and stakeholders.

He regularly attends conferences with bodies such as the Landscape Institute, the RSA and the Linnaean Society, and is currently on the Pathway to Chartership with the Landscape Institute.
